SCANDAL IN HIGH, PLACES .- One of the wealthiest and most successful bankers of this city lives in Fifth avenue. He was formerly a merchant, and is now at the head of the most successful and influential banking house in the State. His name has been a tower of strength, financially, morally and religiously for a quarter of a century. He was distinguished for his close application to his business. Every summer his family enjoyed the season at some one of the fashionable watering places. But the banker was too busy to leave his desk. Summer and winter he kept at his work. He was no yachtsinan, no sportsman and no horseman. He was never seen at the park; down the bay, nor at the trotting course. Fast horses were his horror. But as a business man he had no equal. The street was agitated with the rumor that the banker's wife had obtained a divorce, and that the fine establishment up town had been broken up. The affair was managed very quietly, the defendant putting in no appearance, and allowing the divorce to go by default. The excitement was intensified by the fact that the banker had kept up an establishment besides his home, only a block or two away. Here for years he had found a cosy retreat, when business did not press; and though he drove no fast! teams on the road, and did not loiter about watering places during the summer, he had attractions suited to his peculiar taste which he indulged. How a man as prominent as this banker could pursue the line of life charged on him for so many years without exposure is one of the mysteries that belong to New York, -A. Y. Cor. Boston Journal.
